STRATEGY

Objective is maximum runs tonight, so the hitters who are actually producing in Fall 2026 get the most PA and the at-bats with runners on. The two calls that shaped the card: Brayden Owens moves up to the four-hole on pure current form (4 HR, 1.000 iso in 15 PA, an XBH in each of his last three games) ahead of bigger career names, and Dustin Klimek gets placed against his career line — a 1.836 career OPS with a .328 iso, but one extra-base hit in 18 PA this fall, so he table-sets at 2 on his on-base skill instead of hitting in the heart. Hunter Johnson is the other deliberate inversion: the team's best career power bat (2.236, .745 iso) hits sixth because 8 PA across two games, none since 9/08, is too thin and too stale to buy a run-producing slot tonight. Trevor Millen takes slot 5 and Stephen Perry slot 9 per the coach's standing instructions, both of which the current lines support anyway.
