STRATEGY

Top of the order leans on pure on-base ability — Casey and Dustin Klimek carry .791+ OBPs with zero strikeouts between them — feeding a heart of Owen Vahey and Hunter Johnson, who own the two biggest slugging lines (1.436 and 1.500) and 16 of the team's home runs. Trevor Millen sits at 5 per the coach's standing instruction to bat him in the middle; his .810 OBP would normally lead off, and that's the one place stats gave way to the instruction. The bottom third is contact-and-sample-limited: Daniel Jacob is placed neutrally at 8 because 11 PA tells us little, while Stephen Perry (standing instruction: bottom) and Douglas Bonness round it out on genuinely weak lines. Note the analysis block itself says reordering is worth only ~0.2 runs/game, so this is a modest optimization, not a shakeup.
